PLAINTIFF'S SUPPLEMENTAL BRIEF RE: STANDING

The case now pending before the court implicates strong public policy considerations, specifically the public's confidence in the law-making process and in its legislators' integrity in adhering to constitutional requirements, as well as the legislators' adherence to validly enacted statutes. In order to protect the public's trust, the Alaska Constitution requires the faithful observance of detailed procedures for law enactment. The Alaska Constitution defines with specificity the mechanics of legislation. Each provision has a purpose designed to engender a responsible legislative process worthy of the public trust.¹ And, as the Malone v. Meekins Court stated, "To be sure, the judicial branch of government has the constitutionally mandated duty to ensure compliance with the provisions of the

Alaska Constitution, including compliance by the legislature.”²

It is undeniable that this case involves public policy considerations that should be decided on the merits. It is respectfully submitted that to restrict the public’s vital interest in maintaining its legislators’ faithful observance of detailed procedures for law enactment is to shut the courthouse doors to Plaintiff in this matter, which will virtually ensure that the leadership in the Legislature will repeatedly call illegitimate meetings of legislators whenever the leadership cannot by other lawful means override the policies of the executive branch of government. As will be discussed, infra, intentionally disregarding the detailed procedures for law enactment puts in jeopardy the legal basis of every legislative enactment that is processed during the illegitimate meetings.

Initially, and with all due respect, it appears that the court may not fully appreciate the import of the usurpation of power that Defendants Edgmon and Giessel have undertaken in conducting a pseudo-legislative session in symbol of Defendants’ resolute refusal to attend the special session in Wasilla to which they had been constitutionally called. Rather than foresee the problems that attach to legislation that is enacted outside of the carefully detailed constitutional and statutory requirements, it appears that the court may have at first regarded Plaintiff's Motion for Declaratory Judgment and Preliminary Injunction [Motion] simply to be a partisan-based nuisance to the Legislature's leadership and the orderly conduct of legislative business, being brought as a possible alter ego of a governor who has not necessarily endeared himself to many Alaskans, especially given his controversial budget cuts.

With the benefit of historical hindsight, it can now be seen that Plaintiff's sense of urgency was valid. Two appropriations bills have now been enrolled in the legislative record, contrary to the Alaska Constitution. Plaintiff has been injured.

The court's sua sponte November 5, 2019, Amended Request for Supplemental Briefing on the Issue of the Plaintiff's Standing [Order] indicates that the court will consider Plaintiff's standing along with the other Rule 12 issues that have already been briefed. At this juncture, however, the court is obviously indicating its intention to summarily dismiss Plaintiff's suit, stating:

[P]laintiff has not alleged any facts on the face of his complaint or other filings suggesting that he has suffered any form of direct economic or even intangible injury as a result of the defendants' actions. Nor has the plaintiff established that he has met the requirements for citizen-taxpayer standing."³

Plaintiff respectfully responds that the pleadings taken all together unmistakably demonstrate Plaintiff's citizen-taxpayer standing, as discussed infra. Moreover, it will also be discussed, infra, that Plaintiff has interest-injury standing to bring his suit, as well as standing to be declared a public interest litigant pursuant to AS 09.60.010(c), Cost and Attorney Fees Allowed Prevailing Party. However, if this court is considering dismissing the Complaint for Declaratory Judgment and Injunctive Relief [Complaint] on the basis that standing has not been sufficiently recited to the court's satisfaction, Plaintiff requests that the court, instead, allow Plaintiff to amend his Complaint.⁴

Plaintiff respectfully submits that the court must not avoid deciding the merits of this most important and precedential case in favor of applying an inappropriately strict interpretation to the question of standing.

I. Subject matter jurisdiction.

Subject matter jurisdiction is the legal authority of a court to hear and decide a particular type of case.⁵ That this court has subject matter jurisdiction over Plaintiff's Complaint is established at AS 22.10.020(b) as follows:

In case of an actual controversy in the state, the superior court, upon the filing of an appropriate pleading, may declare the rights and legal relations of an interested party seeking the declaration, whether or not further relief is or could be sought. The declaration has the force and effect of a final judgment or decree and is reviewable as such. Further necessary or proper relief based on a declaratory judgment or decree may be granted, after reasonable notice and hearing, against an adverse party whose rights have been determined by the judgment.

⁴ Ruckle v. Anchorage School Dist., 85 P.3d 1030, 1038 and 1039 (Alaska 2004), "[W]here plaintiffs have demonstrated valid reasons for amending a pleading, they will be permitted to do so;" "We have long held that leave to amend a pleading should be freely given and that, absent a showing that the amendment would have resulted in injustice, a trial court will be found to have abused its discretion in denying a motion to amend."

For example, declaratory relief may be sought to determine the validity and construction of statutes and public acts.⁶ Also, as stated, supra, “the judicial branch of government has the constitutionally mandated duty to ensure compliance with the provisions of the Alaska Constitution, including compliance by the legislature.”⁷ The court has subject matter jurisdiction over challenges to the validity of promulgated regulations, as in Coghill v. Boucher,⁸ where the Court reversed the superior court’s denial of the citizens’ preliminary injunction motion and its dismissal of the citizens’ claims in a case that challenged the Lieutenant Governor’s authority to promulgate a regulation without conforming to the applicable provision of the Administrative Procedure Act. Also, the Court exercised its subject matter jurisdiction over the Malone appellants’ contention that their constitutional right to free speech was denied when the Speaker Pro Tem ruled that there could be no debate on the open nominations.⁹ In Abood v. Gorsuch, the Court exercised its subject matter jurisdiction when deciding the question of what quorum of a joint legislative session is necessary for confirmation of the governor’s appointment of department heads.¹⁰

While these Opinions do address matters internal to the Legislature, even more importantly they address matters intrinsic to the Alaska Constitution. As such, the court is compelled to uphold the Constitution, which does not imply that the court is “meddling in the internal affairs” of another branch of government. In filing the Complaint, Plaintiff has stepped forward and asked the court to uphold the constitutional safeguards that ensure the fullest opportunity to debate and deliberate on proposed laws.¹¹

Plainly, the court has subject matter jurisdiction over Plaintiff’s Complaint, which alleges that Defendants’ act of civil disobedience violated the Alaska Constitution and that the subsequent passage of House Bill 2001 and Senate Bill 2002 were invalid because the proceedings did not conform to the detailed constitutional and statutory procedures for law enactment.

Plaintiff understands the court’s Order to be discussing subject matter jurisdiction as it relates to the court’s ability to dismiss a lawsuit pursuant to CR 12(b)(1). The Order reasons that subject matter jurisdiction does not exist where there is a lack of standing. As stated in Trustees for Alaska v. State:

Standing in our state courts is not a constitutional doctrine; rather, it is a rule of judicial self-restraint based on the principle that courts should not resolve abstract questions or issue advisory opinions. The basic requirement for standing in Alaska is adversity.¹²

Bowers Office Products, Inc. v. University of Alaska reiterated that the “case of controversy” is actually an umbrella doctrine encompassing many specific legal theories, including theories of standing.¹³ But, the Bowers Court importantly noted that the term “case of controversy” is used to describe a constitutional limitation on federal court jurisdiction and that the Alaska court should first look to its own precedent and statutes.¹⁴

It is troubling that the Order apparently retreats to the more restrictive notions of standing embodied in federal case law and the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.¹⁵ The Coghill Court stated that the Alaska Court has departed from a restrictive interpretation of the standing requirement.¹⁶

However, when applying to this case the concept of standing as it is broadly interpreted by the Alaska Court,¹⁷ Plaintiff clearly has interest-injury standing inasmuch as he, as well as all Permanent Fund Dividend [PFD] applicants and all citizens of the state stand to lose the economic benefit of the legislative appropriations that are in jeopardy due to the Defendants’ failure to conform to the detailed constitutional procedures for passing legislation.¹⁸ Plaintiff’s interest-injury standing will be discussed further, infra.

Similarly, Plaintiff also has citizen-taxpayer standing to litigate his vital interest, as well as the vital interest of all citizens of Alaska in maintaining the integrity of the legislative leadership's compliance with detailed constitutional procedures for passing legislation and creating law. This precept of law applies to acts appropriating public funds.

Moreover, inasmuch as his claims are constitutional, this court must in due course find that Plaintiff is a public interest litigant. However, for the purposes of Plaintiff's standing to sue, the court should not be concerned with the application of fee shifting on the basis of Plaintiff's public interest standing. Also, for the purposes of determining standing, the court should not be concerned with the truth of the allegations or the merits of the legal arguments. Rather, the sole issue regarding Plaintiff's standing to bring his Complaint is discussed, infra, which is where the focus needs to be.

II. Interest-injury standing.

Plaintiff recited standing in the Complaint where he averred that he has been a resident of Alaska for over 40 years. Plaintiff's residency should be sufficient to establish interest-injury standing due to his reasonable apprehension that the budgetary appropriations in Senate Bill 2002 and in House Bill 2001 are in jeopardy as a result of Defendants' liability in ensuring that the appropriations were not lawfully enacted. Plaintiff is entitled to the public benefit of State appropriations (as are all Alaskans).

Adversity plainly exists. Plaintiff filed suit to protect, inter alia, his economic interests, as well as, parenthetically, the interests of all Alaskans. In addition to being a resident of Alaska, Plaintiff is also a Permanent Fund Dividend [PFD] applicant and recipient, as well as a tax payer. See Affidavit of Stanley Allen Vezey.

The facts establish that Governor Dunleavy's June 13, 2019, Proclamation, in which Governor Dunleavy called the Legislature to a second special session to commence in Wasilla on July 8, 2019, designated several purposes, including funding and payment of the PFDs.¹⁹ The Complaint alleges that Defendants held a meeting of legislators in Juneau that began on July 8, 2019, which meeting was not a legally constituted legislative session. Adversity plainly exists and is reaffirmed in Defendants' Motion to Dismiss Pursuant to Legislative Immunity; Civil Rule 12(b)(2); Nonjusticiability; and Civil Rule 12(b)(6), as well as in Plaintiff's Reply.²⁰ The economic implications to Plaintiff and to all Alaska citizens will be enormous. Interest-injury plainly exists.

The Alaska Constitution, Art. 2, § 9, Special Sessions, authorizes the governor to call a 30-day special session of the Legislature. Article 3, § 17, Convening Legislature, authorizes the governor to convene the Legislature. Both action verbs connote a spatial concept of time and place, i.e. when and where. Implicit in the governor's constitutional power to call a special session is the governor's power to designate the date and the location of the session. This is reinforced by AS 24.05.100(a)(1), which grants to the governor authority to call the Legislature into special session, and AS 24.05.100(b), which states that the governor shall state the location in the proclamation. However, because Defendants refused to attend the second special session but, instead, held mock proceedings in Juneau in which they purported to deliberate on appropriations, the appropriations in SB 2002 and HB 2001 were not lawfully passed and are in jeopardy from future legitimate legal challenges.

SB 2002 "passed" in direct violation of Alaska Const. Art. 2 § 10, Adjournment.²¹ SB 2002 appropriated $176,751,829.00, which proceedings violated the Constitution and which appropriations are thus invalid by virtue of the fact that both houses adjourned for more than three days without the concurrence of the other. Plaintiff is directly affected by this appropriation but stands to be harmed and not benefited when the appropriation is unlawfully passed, as is the case at hand.

Similarly, HB 2001 purported to appropriate money for payment of the PFD checks, among many other appropriations. The proceedings were held in violation of the Governor's power to call the legislators to a special session. Also, Art. 2, § 14 of the Alaska Constitution provides that, among other formalities, no bill may become law until it has passed three readings in each house on three separate days. The Defendants' failure to comply with Art. 2, § 14 is not a minor informality. Section 14 of Art. 2 is a formal safeguard that underscores a vital public interest in ensuring that laws be made by informed lawmakers.²² HB 2001 was purportedly read for the first time in Juneau on July 8, 2019, during a meeting of legislators that did not constitute a legislative session and while 16 legislators were in Wasilla. The so-called passage of HB 2001 was not in conformity with the constitutional requirements for legislative action.²³ The impact of the invalid appropriations, including the payment of the PFD will harm each recipient when the appropriations are challenged legally. In 2019, the PFD recipients likely number approximately 670,759,²⁴ which is 91 percent of Alaska's population.

²¹ Alaska Const. Art. 2, § 10, Adjournment, reads: "Neither house may adjourn or recess for longer than three days unless the other concurs. If the two houses cannot agree on the time of adjournment and either house certifies the disagreement to the governor, he may adjourn the legislature."

Copies of HB 2001 and SB 2002, as vetoed, are attached hereto as Appendix 2 and Appendix 3, respectively.

The economic ramifications to Plaintiff and to the public's interests are significant. The form of this injury is multiple. In addition to the one billion sixty-eight million dollars ($1,068,000,000) appropriated to pay for an estimated 631,000 PFDs, there is the erosion of our constitutional form of government. Plaintiff has stepped forward to obtain a ruling on the merits which will declare that (1) the July 8 through July 16, 2019, meeting of Defendants was not a constitutionally and statutorily valid legislative session and that (2) none of the purported appropriations in SB 2002 and HB 2001 are legally binding. The court's ruling on the merits will clarify that the governor has the constitutional power to call a special session at a time and place designated by the governor and will also signal to the Thirty-First Legislature that it must rectify matters in the time remaining before the Thirty-Second Legislature is constituted.

Plaintiff's economic interest in receiving a legally valid PFD check is in serious jeopardy of being voided and return demanded or debited to Plaintiff's account. Plaintiff's interest-injury standing does not need to wait for the anticipated harm to materialize before bringing an action to protect his rights.²⁵

And again, if this court is considering dismissing the Complaint on the basis that interest-injury standing has not been explicitly recited to the court's satisfaction, Plaintiff requests that the court, instead, allow Plaintiff to amend his Complaint.²⁶

III. Citizen-taxpayer standing.

Plaintiff also has citizen-taxpayer standing to bring this suit, which also entails the constitutional claims litigated by Plaintiff in behalf of the public interests. See Affidavit of Stanley Allen Vezey.

In Alaska, citizen-taxpayer status is a sufficient basis on which to challenge

allegedly illegal government conduct on matters of significant public concern.²⁷ First, the case in question must be one of public significance. Second, the plaintiff must be appropriate in several respects, e.g. that there is no one more directly affected than plaintiff, that adversity exists, and the plaintiff is not a sham plaintiff. Further, the plaintiff must appear capable for economic or other reasons to competently advocate the asserted position.²⁸

As discussed in Part II at pages 10 and 11, supra, the ramifications of the economic damage to Plaintiff and Alaska's citizens are enormous. Even more significant is maintaining the public's confidence in the law-making process and in its legislators' integrity in adhering to constitutional requirements, as well as the legislators' adherence to validly enacted statutes. Again, the court's ruling on the merits of the Complaint will clarify that the governor has the constitutional power to call a special session at a time and place designated by the governor and will also signal to the Thirty-First Legislature that they must rectify matters in the time remaining before the Thirty-Second Legislature is constituted, which will restore Plaintiff and the citizens of Alaska to the level of trust in their legislators that they possessed prior to July 8, 2019. As such, Plaintiff's suit is of great public significance.

Plaintiff is a most appropriate litigant in this matter. There is no one more directly affected by Defendants' acts in violation of the Constitution and no one more directly affected by the loss of trust in the legislative leadership than Plaintiff. The court's Order states that "there appear to be other potential plaintiffs who have been more directly affected by the defendants' actions."²⁹ Although the Order thereby implies that the court does indeed see a sustainable cause of action in this matter, the Order gives no hint which "other potential plaintiffs" might be more directly affected than Plaintiff. By law, the Executive Branch cannot be one of those other potential plaintiffs.

Arguably, Governor Dunleavy may be more directly affected. But, the Alaska Constitution, Art. 3, § 16, expressly bars the governor from suing the Legislature.³⁰ It is also unreasonable to think that the Legislative Council would bring suit on the stated claims because both Defendants are Members of the Legislative Council. In fact, a majority of members of the Thirty-First Legislature were complicit in attending the ad hoc meeting in Juneau beginning July 8, 2019, and also attended the second special session that was convened in Juneau from July 17, 2019, forward when the purported appropriations were "passed" in nonconformity with the specific constitutional requirements. Notwithstanding a legislator's status as a citizen, the Alaska Supreme Court has previously denied

Although the Opinion of the Keller Court discusses the concept that Governor Palin did not intend to sue the Legislature, nowhere does the Court state that the governor could lawfully sue the Legislature. The holding in Legislative Council v. Knowles is contrary to the idea the governor could have been a litigant. Clearly, Legislative Council v. Knowles actually confirms justiciability in cases deemed to be disputes between legislators.³¹ As such, a legislator has citizen-taxpayer standing only equal to any other citizen-taxpayer. That leaves only the aggrieved citizens to bring suit on Defendants' illegal acts. And, no citizen is more qualified than Plaintiff to bring this suit. To date, no other citizen of Alaska has advanced Plaintiff's constitutional claims. Plaintiff is most certainly not a sham plaintiff because, as discussed, supra, adversity certainly exists between the parties.³²

Finally, Plaintiff is a former State representative and is an experienced litigator. Plaintiff has litigated numerous suits, as well as appeals.³³ The extensive pleadings already filed in this case indicate that Plaintiff is capable and competent to continue to litigate this matter.

Plaintiff's citizen-taxpayer standing in this matter is beyond reasonable dispute. If the court is inclined to dismiss the suit because the Complaint does not sufficiently alleged citizen-taxpayer standing to the court's satisfaction, Plaintiff again requests leave to amend his Complaint.

IV. Conclusion.

For the strongest possible public policy reasons, the court should decide the prohibition established in Art. 3, § 16 of the Alaska Constitution that bars the governor from suing the Legislature.

this case on the merits. At the very heart of this adversarial action is Defendants' unsustainable contention that the leadership of the Legislature has the right to override the governor's Proclamation for a 30-day special session as to the place, date, and time, and possibly even as to the subjects and legislation designated for consideration at the special session. The consequences to all Alaskans of Defendants defying the Constitution has been that the appropriations set forth in HB 2001 and SB 2002, including the PFD payments are in legal peril.

To dismiss Plaintiff's case on a strict application of standing rather than the broad interpretation that the Alaska Court employs is to run the risk that this important constitutional issue will continue to recur and evade review. For the court to continue to withhold judgment on to this issue is, in practical effect, to silently approve of the Defendants' unconstitutional and unlawful tactics.

One is reminded of the lawsuits repeatedly presented to the courts challenging the presidential power to start the Vietnam War and asking the courts to settle the question of whether the undeclared war in Vietnam was unconstitutional. In case after case testing the war's constitutionality the courts rejected the cases on the rationales of standing, nonjusticiable political question, or because there was no legal standard for judging the cases. The Justice Department actively litigated against resolving the constitutional question. Thirteen members of the U.S. House of Representatives unsuccessfully sued on the basis that the members were deprived of their power to vote on a war declaration. Of the 26 cases that had been taken to the U.S. Supreme Court, none were decided and all but one was turned aside without review. To many, the United States Supreme Court's intractable silence has been seen as its condoning the Vietnam War.

Defendants' should be held accountable for their unlawful conduct. The court should not, by its silence countenance Defendants' unlawful acts.

Plaintiff has interest-injury standing, taxpayer-citizen standing, and public interest standing, as well as citizen-PDF standing if the court is so inclined. To date, no other claimants have come forward. There is no one better positioned than Plaintiff to litigate this important constitutional issue.

Time is of the essence. Without a resolution of the core question, the legislative uncertainty will taint the acts of the Thirty-First Legislature into the distant future. The Thirty-Second Legislature will form a changed body of legislators with a change in legislative goals and objectives. Plaintiff, as well as all citizens of Alaska, have had their interests injured and have citizen-taxpayer standing to demand that the Defendants lead the Thirty-First Legislature to redress the invalid appropriations and to restore Plaintiff's trust in the law-making process.
